Sharpshooter

MARCH 2018

Last month was another busy one. Your Camp was involved in several activities surrounding the 2018 Olustee Battle Reenactment. Several members arrived on Thursday to set up camp and secure the area for the H.L. Hunley submarine exhibit. More troops arrived on Friday and brought supplies needed to man the S.C.V. recruitment surrounding the H.L. Hunley.

Over the weekend hundreds of Confederate Veteran magazines, recruitment flyers and Florida War Between the States magazines were given out and Kirby-Smith represented the core standards of our organization at Florida's largest battle. Special thanks to all those members that supported the Olustee event and made it a successful campaign. With that kind of devotion, we continue to prove why Camp #1209 is one of the largest and the most active camp in the Confederation.

God Bless, Commander Calvin J. Hart

We just received your very generous gift of $300.00 to help children and I couldn't wait to thank you!

The children who rely on Children's Home Society of Florida (CHS) struggle with seemingly insurmountable odds ... abuse, poverty, instability. Yet, because of you, they have hope to do more than overcome these obstacles – they have opportunities to thrive. You are changing the trajectories of their lives!

With more than 50,000 children and family members counting on CHS, your kindness will make a lasting difference in their lives.

Thank you so much for building bridges to success for children.

With deep appreciation,

We do good.

Fayetteville Musket

When Stonewall Jackson captured Harper's Ferry in 1861 the arsenal contained both rifle and rifle-musket manufacturing machinery. The rifle-musket machinery and parts were sent to the Richmond Armory to manufacture the Richmond Rifle-Musket. The rifle making machinery and parts were sent to the arsenal in Fayetteville,

North Carolina. Fayetteville's production is broken down into four models. The first of these arms is distinguished by its high-hump lock plate. The second by its low-hump lock plate, and the third by its low-profile lock plate, all three of these being equipped with a bayonet lug to take the saber style bayonet. The fourth model is identical to the third model with the exception that the bayonet lug had been discontinued. The rifle shown here is the fourth model. The lock plate has the standard CSA under an eagle and Fayetteville stamped forward of the hammer and the year, 1864, behind the hammer. The brass butt plate has a C.S.A. stamped into the tang.

Dear fellow Compatriot,

We have finished the restoration of the museum. The museum has never looked better and if you have not been by in the last two weeks, you should go by and see for yourself. We still need money to pay for the work that has been done. We appreciate the donations that been made to date and ask to others to contribute to the cause of presenting the story of our ancestors. Join us in fighting the public perception that our ancestors were traitors.

In the Bonds of the Old South, very best wishes,

Ben Willingham

Sure Shot: Confederate Sharpshooters Left No Doubt the Whitworth Was Their Weapon of Choice—

From hundreds of yards away, a Confederate sharpshooter carefully aimed his prized Whitworth, the crosshairs of its Davidson telescopic sight outlined against the ramparts of Fort Stevens in Washington, D.C. Through the scope—fitted to the left side of the stock—his eye scanned the ample crowd of Union soldiers and plucky civilians who had ventured by, hoping to observe warfare up close. Suddenly, the shooter's attention shifted to a tall bearded man wearing a stovepipe hat, realizing it was that Yankee president, within easy range of his English-made precision rifle. As he prepared to fire, though, a Federal officer dragged Abraham Lincoln out of view.

This isn't fiction. Lincoln actually came under fire on July 12, 1864, when Confederate Lt. Gen. Jubal Early's Raid of Maryland reached Fort Stevens on the outskirts of the Union capital. Spent Whitworth bullets have been discovered in the vicinity, and we know sharpshooter rounds killed an officer a few feet away from the president. Had Lincoln been brought down, the Civil War may well have come to an entirely different conclusion, and an imported muzzle-loading rifle pressed into service by the Confederacy was the deadly tool that could have accomplished the job.
